The Global Consciousness Project
Meaningful Correlations in Random Data

Over 20 Years of Research and Counting

A project of now over two decades of experiments from (PEAR) Princeton Engineering Anomalies Research Lab at Princeton University in New Jersey.

To identify and examine subtle correlations that may reflect the presence and activity of consciousness in the world. Random Number Generators to take advantage of (Quantum Tunneling) notice subtle structures and patterns otherwise un-detectable by Humans.

Anomalous outputs from Random Number Generators appear to show subtle patterns that correlate with widespread and even emotional response to world events.

Subtle but real effects of consciousness are important scientifically, but the real reward could be immediate awareness.

For well over 2 years

The programming team, electrical engineers and independent volunteers have been collaborating through NCPCS to develop technologies to convert data into binary bits utilizing algorithmic RNG programs and advanced electronics. We have developed and are working on various new prototypes to help be aware of these anomalous coalescent events in time.

Now Two quantum tunneling, Random Number Generator algorithms run at an adjustable rate logging the results to provide a visual real-time representation of coalescent events on an 81 grid array of independently controlled LEDs. Laid out in a horizontal and vertical pattern to represent the output of each independent 9 base numbering systems. One RNG provides output for the horizontal and the other the vertical plane. Visually recognize and easily identify these anomalous consistent patterns for your own awareness.

Soon, visually recognize, track and identify these anomalous consistent patterns in space time
